The ORCAS project aims to bring new light to the biological carbon pump, the process by which atmospheric carbon dioxide is sequestered in the deep ocean in the form of sinking particles produced by plankton. The objectives of ORCAS are to:

- validate a state-of-the-art biogeochemical model against novel high-resolution measurements made by drifting underwater...